Digital mammograms are taken the same way as film mammograms but can be viewed immediately after they are taken (as above).*

Every year, breast cancer strikes 250,000 American women and kills more than 40,000.

Early detection is vital to reducing breast cancer's staggering toll on women and their families.

That's why Altoona Regional has brought digital mammography to our area.

Digital mammography uses computers and specially designed digital detectors to produce an electronic image of the breast. Radiologists can study the image on a computer screen, adjusting and zooming for optimum viewing of tissue.

The high quality of the image often reduces the need to have a mammogram redone.

Digital mammography is world-class technology that saves lives. But only if you use it.
